

NEW-YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

New York, July 9, 1899. Did you ever hear of landauism? I have; and I had on Wednesday been stopping at the United States Hotel, near Fulton and Water streets, very likely I should have had some. A festive servant girl there, from the public city of Boston, conceived a dislike against the other servants, and certain of the boarders, and hit upon a very neat expedient of giving them a dose of landauism—only the "poison" in this case was hot, and not cold, as is popularly supposed to be the case with popovers. Appie dumplings were dropped, and the lethal sauce was to be applied, and so successful were her operations that the simultaneous cry at the table was "How queer this sauce tastes!" Here the success ended, and Winifred (that is the name of the beautiful landauist) did not even have the satisfaction of causing a single death. A dozen stomach-pumps were at once put in requisition; Winifred was taken to Jefferson Market Police Court, and apple dumplings have disappeared from the United States' bill of fare.

Judge Cardoso has just had to do with a larynx case which bears very strongly upon ritualism. Though not very much of a ritualist myself, I have a sympathy with people who like to worship by genuflections, just as I have a sympathy with all other conscientious modes of worship. It appears that Mrs. Caroline C. Allen had a writ of habeas corpus issued against her a couple of months ago in Seneca county, where she was then residing; that it was served at the instance of her son, the Rev. Charles D. Allen; and that the alleged reason was her habit of attending early prayers at a ritualistic church, and bowing at the sacred name in the creed and in the Gloria. This was the substance of all that could be said against her. The son, however, had a low church, and it is probable that he feared that his mother, if allowed to continue her genuflections ad libitum, might end her days in a convent and enrich Catholicism with her property. Consequently he shut her up. Fortunately for Mrs. Allen, she has plenty of friends in this city perfectly competent to testify to her sanity. Among them are Dr. Vinton, Admiral Farragut, and Mrs. Jerome—good talkers all of them. The Judge has not yet rendered a decision, but there can be no doubt it will be in favor of Mrs. Allen.

That poor Mr. Fisk! how he can bask, night after night, as he does, in the radiance of the footlights at his opera house, his head reclining against the luxuriant paper of the private box, and his feet propped over the rim of the box, is more than I can tell. Perhaps he is secretly looking forward to a happy and decrepit old age, when, as he sits in his chair, he shall have run his course and been forgotten, and a vista of enthralled and captured prime donne shall rain down remembered brightness upon him. I have no doubt the fat rogue does a good deal of work, but he is a faithful attendant at the opera house, for all that. I suspect, though, he is only looking after trade. Madame Parpa was there last night in a box opposite, accompanied by her devoted Carl, who seemed just the right kind of little "hubby" for such a big, melodious woman. And Parpa applauded Lucille with her own chubby, jeweled hands, and Lucille kissed back an acknowledgment, and the whole interchange of courtesies between the two great artists was one of the most soothing amenities ever witnessed in a theatre. I think, if I were a prima donna, next to being in the stage, I should enjoy making a figure of myself in a private box, and enjoy the loggiettes levelled at me.

That missing Englishman, Stebbings by name, has not yet turned up, and his companions have been compelled to go home without him. A romantic story about his having written a note to the proprietors of the Brevoort House, announcing that he would put in an appearance on a certain day, has been and is still being circulated and believed. He has come and gone, however, and nothing is heard from the Englishman, and probably nothing will be now. Some of the cynical even say that there is no Englishman in the case, and that the entire sensation is nothing but a hoax got up by a reporter who was at his wits' end for something to write about. Circumstances, however, strongly point to the fact that the missing man is not dead, but is somewhere among us, an extortionate and impatient as the fact that the mountain passes of modern Italy and Rome. Of course their proceedings are New Yorkized and refined to such an extent that they cease to be regarded as banditti. They go to work in a cool, business-like way, and have nothing romantic in their dispositions. One reason for believing that this is the case, is the very recent and mysterious disappearance of a young lady who started from Monday on a visit to this city. When last seen she was on the Hudson River railroad, on the evening of June 15. Since that date she has not been heard of. She was seventeen years of age and her name was Alzein Puton, and her mother is naturally almost insane at the intelligence that her daughter is missing. Mademoiselle Alzein was a French girl, and could not speak English. She was coming to this city on a visit to some relatives. She was interesting, young, extremely beautiful, and extremely naive. Just the lambkin that some blase wolf of a voluptuary would compass any end to capture. She left Montreal, but was placed under the care of the conductor. On the way the conductor missed her; at any rate, he could not tell whether she left the car at the Thirtieth street depot, or at one of the stations between this city and Albany. Such are the facts; what is the moral? Have we accomplished heroes of kidnapers among us? and, if so, who is safe? There are lurid and romantic fables to crop out in the mids of a prosaic and business people. But then we are not a commonplace people, that is one satisfaction. Our crimes are as original as our institutions.

I presume it is all right—an expression, by-the-way, which is usually made use of when it is pretty certain that it is all wrong. In the present case, however, I suppose it is all right. The sequel was that eternal war between actors and critics, and that each should seek a favorable opportunity of knocking the other down. We have just recovered from the emotions due to the Henderson-Butler assault, when we are called upon to admire the mutual pluck of Messrs. Tayleure and Murray. It is not right that the public should be kept in a state of perpetual trepidation. All it is due for is a little rest, and a string needs relaxing occasionally. It is neither wise nor kind to keep the pot boiling all the time. Mr. Henderson was very inconsiderate in this respect, and Mr. Butler was not thoughtful. Mr. Tayleure has been careless, and General Dominick Murray should have given the matter the sober second thought. To what does all this tend? What has happened? Nothing? Nothing of any importance, excepting the husband of an actress. The drama-dramatist and manager is Mr. Clifton W. Tayleure, and the injured husband is General Dominick Murray, a "blasted" Britisher, fond of his beef, fond of his beer, but fonder of abusing America and Americans. His wife is the Miss Josephine Fiddes who, some weeks ago, published a fearful card, in which the American public was appealed to, and some heart-broken remarks about the home-sickness of foreigners were dropped. Miss Fiddes made her first appearance as "Miranda," at Fisk's Opera House, when the Tempest was produced there; but the public did not seem to consider her form sufficiently attenuated for the part. Neither did Mr. Tayleure, who had engaged the lady in London, and who finally dismissed her from her engagement, and having had one or two bad nights, and in consequence of a card he had published, and in which he had inadvertently made an insinuation of a not very complimentary character. About three weeks ago General Dominick arrived in this country, and to him Mrs. Dominick at once detailed her grievances. He told her to dry her eyes, ordered her some London brown stout, rare roast-beef and Yorkshire pudding for two, and bottle up his wrath with the unmixing of the drink. "The sequel was a row at the Metropolitan, though whether Cliff or Dominick began it, or who ended it, or who got the worst, or whether it is going to be done all over again, I'm sure I don't know, or care who does, so that there is a row. That is the principal thing.

The Cunard steamer Russia, which sailed from this port yesterday, took out an immense number of clergymen, and several bankers. Among the latter was Mr. Jay Cooke, Jr., who intends to go through an elaborate process of rejuvenation. Bank stocks and speculation, like the poetry which Mr. Wagg read, have a wearing effect upon the brain, and every one knows that Paris is the only spot in the world (besides New York) to recuperate it at. Mr. Tayleure says he is quite ready to encounter as many husbands of third-rate English actresses as choose to insult him and invite him to the opportunity. Long before the husband of Miss Fiddes arrived in this country, he received a vituperative letter from that gentleman, in which he was called almost everything that one man could be called by another. For my part, I don't see what Miss Fiddes has to complain of. If the American public was not pleased with her, had as in the taste argued on the part of that public, no one can deny that the director of the opera house was not to blame. So far as money relations were concerned, at any rate, Miss Josephine was exceedingly well treated, her salary having been in the neighborhood of $15 per night. The fact is, English actresses are spoiled by being made much of in this country. In London they receive much less for doing much more. In this country actresses who go far enough West have gold bricks thrown to them. Out East here we make almost as much of fools in our way with stars who come to us from across the water. Thank "svings" the hour has come to "shut down" upon these usurpers. Olive Logan says so in her barbed wire in her article on the "Nude Drama," and I follow suit. The Nude drama is soon to become the Renewed. ALL BARS.

THE STEAM YACHT "SEAWEED."—Mention has been made of the launch of the steam yacht Seaweed, constructed by John L. Knowlton, at his yard, Reed Street wharf, Philadelphia, for Dr. J. H. Schenck, and named in honor of his popular preparation, "Seaweed Tonic," so well known as one of the three specimens of world-wide celebrity for the cure of Consumption. The yacht, which is 69 feet in length, 13 feet 6 inches wide of beam, and 5 feet depth of hold, is a model of the workmanship, and has been provided with a quantity of anything of its class now afloat. The cabin is 12 feet 6 inches long, 8 feet wide, with a skylight running the entire length, and is provided with sleeping berths for twelve persons, also a kitchen, wine locker, water closets, and other conveniences. All of the cabin is 10 feet deck room, with a gangway of 24 inches on either side. The machinery of the yacht is the most approved construction, the boiler being fifty inches in diameter and 7 feet 6 inches high, containing 125 two-inch tubes, each 4 feet 5 inches long. The engine is a 30-horse power cylinder, with 12 inch stroke, of 30 horse power, and is one of the most simple and compact pieces of mechanism ever devised. It is driven by a shaft of 2 1/2 inches diameter, with a pitch of 8 feet 6 inches. The pilot house is in the form of a semicircle, a most desirable shape to afford a full view. The boat was designed by Mr. John W. Lynn, the well-known shipbuilder. The timber for the construction of the craft was selected by the contractor with special care, the frames being of well-seasoned Delaware white oak, which prevents greatly the wear and tear. The construction throughout has been of the most substantial character, while the yacht itself is furnished with exquisite style and taste. Competent judges who have examined the construction and working of the yacht, and who are conversant with the kind of distance anything of the kind in our inland waters. At a recent trial trip the rate of fifteen miles an hour was obtained, but even this higher claim is not all that may be expected.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE IN FAVOR OF HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS.—W. H. Raess, a leading druggist in Monticello, Ill., in a letter of June 6, 1899, writes to this effect: "Having sold Hostetter's Bitters for the past four years, I cannot but speak of the article as being the best tonic and appetite extant. During the acute season of 1896-7, I could not keep a sufficient stock on hand to supply my customers. In fact, my rigors were as simple as quinine. I learn that physicians prescribe it all over the Western country. Indeed, a great many families think they are not well without just a few bottles of it. For the past few years, I have used the Bitters constantly in my own family for the previous two years. He first tried the preparation when suffering from exhaustion and nervous attack of fever. Before the Bitters were finished he experienced a remarkable change for the better. He had tried brandy at the outset, but found that it did him more harm than good. In one month from the time he commenced using the Bitters, his health, strength, and appetite were restored. He had recommended the article to others in like circumstances, and never known it to fail, and had found it a perfect specific for chills and fever.
